

If a region has a sparse concentration of observations, the bandwidth will be wider, whereas if a region contains a dense concentration of observations, the bandwidth will be narrower.